01	A teacher can notice changes, make a student feel welcome and connect them with appropriate support.
02	It creates an everyday sign that a student is recognised as a person rather than an entry on a list.
03	Peers, lab staff, hostel workers and other campus colleagues may see changes that a classroom teacher misses.
04	It is the practical connection between someone who needs help and the people or services able to provide it.
05	Students encounter teachers routinely, so small reliable interactions can make support easier to find before a crisis.
