01

Research involves uncertainty; useful feedback identifies the work to revisit without turning the result into a judgement of worth.

02

Agree when to meet, how quickly to respond and how feedback will be given and discussed.

03

They give the scholar a dependable place to raise obstacles instead of guessing when support will become available.

04

Consider resources, payments, workload and guidance as well as the technical question being investigated.

05

A shared agreement makes assumptions visible and gives both scholar and supervisor a reference for later conversations.
